Ntumbachushi Falls is a beautiful series of cascades and pools on the Ng'ona River in Zambia's Luapula Province. Known for its scenic beauty and cultural significance, the site culminates in two parallel main waterfalls.

Key features

Main falls: The primary attraction consists of two parallel waterfalls, each about 30 meters high and 10 meters wide, separated by 50 meters.

Cascades and pools: Above the main falls, the river features a picturesque series of smaller cascades and pools stretching over 2 kilometers. This area is ideal for swimming.

Cultural significance: The waters of the Ng'ona River are culturally important to the Lunda and Chishinga people. They have historically been used to bathe chiefs before their installation to cleanse them of bad luck.

Relict rainforest: A small patch of relict rainforest grows in the spray from the falls, adding to the lush environment.

Scenic views: The falls are situated where the river runs over the edge of the northern Zambian plateau, offering beautiful views of the Luapula River valley.

Visiting the falls

Location: The falls are located in Kawambwa District, between the towns of Kazembe (Mwansabombwe) and Kawambwa.

Best time to visit: The falls are most impressive during and immediately after the rainy season, from November to April, when the water flow is at its peak. During the dry season, the flow reduces, creating a "bridalveil" effect, and it becomes an ideal time for swimming.

Activities: You can explore well-maintained trails to view the falls from the top and bottom, swim in the clear pools above the main falls, and camp overnight.

Camping: Camping is possible and the area is secure, making it a great base for exploring other nearby waterfalls.
